Sancerre, Domaine du Nozay, 2018 – Loire Valley

Both organic and biodynamic, this is a delicious example of Sancerre, with generous, creamy fruit and subtle minerality. Expressive of its sunny vintage, beautifully-balanced and fine.

Sancerre is perhaps one of the most famous wine ‘names’ in the world, and the most internationally acclaimed exponent of the Sauvignon Blanc grape. The vineyards of Sancerre are spread over fifteen villages, and Saint-Gemme is home to a gem of an estate, Château du Nozay, with its colourful seventeenth century stone buildings. Bought in 1970 by Philippe de Benoist, who planted the vineyards himself, today the estate is run by son Cyril. Devoted to his land, a champion of terroir, Cyril is a passionate advocate of organic and biodynamic viticulture. Spending a huge amount of time in the vineyard, tending his vines, he is an experimenter by nature and now plays music direct to the vine roots, a practice said to stimulate and balance the vines. In the winery, Cyril has installed tanks shaped as concrete eggs. These fermentation vessels promote different fermentation dynamics to standard tanks, creating wines with a distinctive textural and flavour profile. Their addition to the cellar gives Cyril a rich palette of wines from which to create his chefs d’oeuvre.

Pinot Grigio, La Tunella, 2018 – Colli Orientali del Friuli

Pinot Grigio with depth and elegance. A worthy ambassador of the pure and vibrant style of the Friuli region

La Tunella is an exceptional, family owned estate in north east Italy, near the Slovenian border. Min Zorzettig began farming here in the 1960s and his grandsons Massimo and Marco are now at the helm, growing grapes on vertiginous sun-drenched terraces, planted on a unique mix of calcareous marl and sandstone, called 'ponca' in local dialect. The soil is held to be key to these wines, expressive of their variety and notable for their textural purity and characteristic viscosity.

Château La Tour de l'Evêque Rosé, 2019 – AOC Côtes de Provence

An elegant, vibrant and silky Provence Rosé from organically certified vineyards

Château Tour de l'Evêque's potential was spotted by Gabriel Sumeire, who purchased the estate in 1958. This is an estate steeped in history dating back to the 14th century. Its name translates in English as "The Tower of the Bishop", as the estate was the summer residence of the archbishops of Toulon, when the Roman Catholic papacy was based in nearby Avignon many centuries ago. The subject of many local legends as well as Royal visits, today the estate is in the hands of Gabriel's granddaughter, Régine, one of the first women winemakers in the region and an early pioneer of the famous pale Provence style. The estate grows eight different white and red grape varieties, each subtly different in terms of aroma, flavour and structure, giving Régine a diverse palette of blending options from which to create wines with nuance and refinement. With vines of up to forty years old yielding grapes with superb concentration, and cooling sea breezes preserving freshness, Régine and her team make vibrant, yet graceful wines.

Fleurie 'Grand Pré', Domaine Lathuillère-Gravallon 2018 – Beaujolais

Championing quality Beaujolais, this pretty and perfumed wine, from the Cru vineyards of Fleurie, is carefully crafted by a small family estate

In the far south of Burgundy, the Beaujolais region produces wines with a distinct personality and style of their own. The Gamay grape is grown on granite and schist soils, giving wines with a fruity profile unique to the region. Fleurie is one of Beaujolais's highly regarded Cru villages, producing wines with great structure and a delicate perfume. Domaine Lathuilière-Gravallon is a small estate in the heart of Beaujolais that has been in Cathy Lathuilière's family for five generations. As the current custodians, Cathy and her husband Cédric work their vineyards as closely as possible to organic principles, combining traditional methods with more modern thinking. The vineyards are planted on steep slopes, so machinery is impractical and everything must be done by hand. In the small plot named 'Grand Pré', they carefully tend to 1.9 hectares of fifty year old vines, where grass is allowed to grow between the rows, encouraging the roots to delve even deeper. Typical for Beaujolais, the grapes undergo a process called carbonic maceration, whereby the berries are placed intact into the fermentation vat, rather than crushed first. Unusually, the fermentation then takes place within the grape, giving a wine with vibrant fruit flavours and low tannins.

France, Beaujolais

Domaine Lathuilière-Gravallon

Hawequas, Mont du Toit, 2014 – Wellington

Dark-fruited and rich wine from boutique, family owned winery Mont du Toit

Growing grapes for wine is a long-held family tradition for Stephan du Toit. His French Huguenot forefathers established a farm near Wellington on arrival in the Western Cape, more than three hundred years ago. Stephan, a lawyer by trade, has run the Mont du Toit estate since 1996, continuing his family's legacy. Located at the foot of the Hawequa Mountain, the vineyards benefit from its cooling breezes and warm Mediterranean climate, which provide ideal conditions for growing premium red grapes. Stephan is dedicated to training his team of local workers in all aspects of viticulture and winemaking. Together, they meticulously care for the vines using traditional methods, keeping yields low and harvesting by hand. The blend components for their wines will vary by vintage, depending on which grapes produced the finest fruit that year. This wine is a nod to the Bordeaux style that Stephan is so fond of, with all the warmth and richness of the South African sun!
